Education in the 21st century is increasingly affected by the associated concepts of globalisation and internationalisation. This is manifested in many areas of education in the drive to produce global citizens who are increasingly mobile, able to compete in a global market, and able to act responsibly in an interdependent world. In the UK, as in many other Western Countries, this has led to an increase in mobility through school links, study visits, and study abroad programmes through which, it is assumed, intercultural interactions experienced will contribute to the production of global citizens.

Internationalizing the Curriculum: Student Learning in the Global Experience Program- Dr Sri Soejatminah, Deakin University.

Knowledge making by Pre-service teachers on a professional placement experience in a remote Australian Indigenous Community- Dr Glenn Auld, Ms Julie Dyer and Mr Alan Marshall, Experience, Culture and Learning Emerging Research Group, Deakin University.
