Dr Rebecca Patrick

My name is Rebecca Patrick and I am a Lecturer in the School of Health and Social Development. I have been a permanent staff member at Deakin University since 2007. My qualifications include a Bachelor of Applied Science (Honours), Graduate Certificate in Higher Education and Doctorate of Philosophy. I am a member of the Health, Nature and Sustainability research group, pathway co-ordinator for the Health and Sustainability major within the Health Sciences degree and teach into Public Health-Health Promotion courses at the undergraduate and post-graduate levels.

Ms Teresa Capetola

I have been a lecturer (part time) in the School of Health and Social Development for approximately 16 years, teaching at both post and under graduate levels. I also co-Chair Deakin's only undergraduate multi-faculty unit. I am Health Promotion Pathway Co-ordinator in Bachelor of Health Sciences and team member of the Health and Sustainability Pathway in the Bachelor of Health Sciences. Currently I hold the position of Teaching and Learning Co-ordinator (Health) till end of 2014. I am also one of the Harassment and Discrimination Contact Officers for the School of Health and Social Development.

Ms Natalie Hakman

I am an Associate Lecturer in the School of Health and Social Development, a Deakin Alumnus with a BAppSc(HlthProm)(Hons) and now studying the Graduate Certificate of Higher Education.

Commencing at Deakin in 2002, I am currently the co-unit chair of Understanding Health, a Faculty core unit with an annual enrolment approaching 3000 students, and unit chair of Planning and Evaluation II, a 2nd year Public Health Health Promotion unit.

Recent research explores student views on the relevance of their studies to their intended careers and I am on the project team for Health Literacy@ Deakin, a new prospect for a university-wide study commencing in 2015.
