Acknowledgements

The research team for this report would like to acknowledge the support of many key individuals and organisations without which this research project would not have been completed successfully. Firstly, we would like to acknowledge our partner organisation The Foundation for Young Australians and in particular Dr Lucas Walsh and his team, most notably Brigid Anderson, Jen Sainsbury and Dr Barbara Lemon, for their input and ongoing support in getting this off the ground and into implementation and completion. We would also like to acknowledge the input of the project's steering committee, in particular Dr Yin Paradies, A/Prof David Mellor, Ms Kim Webster, Kavitha Chandra-Shekeran, Dr Steve Francis, Ms Sarah Hardy, Ms Rivkah Nissim, Ms Soo-Lin Quek and Ms Rosalyn Black.

The research project involved a large cohort of students (823 participants) from across Australia, which was made possible by the respective education departments in the states of Victoria, New South Wales, Queensland and the Northern Territory. We also acknowledge the support of the Catholic Education Office, the Department of Education and Early Childhood Development and the Commission for Children and Young People and Child Guardian for facilitating access and on-site visits. The project was implemented in fifteen different schools across the four states and territories and this relied heavily on the leadership and teaching staff of these schools to ensure the successful completion of the surveys and follow-up interviews. We would like to express our sincere gratitude to these school communities, in particular the students and their parents for their support and collaboration. Finally, I would like to acknowledge the support of Deakin University's Institute for Citizenship and Globalisation and its research staff, in particular Dr Louise Jenkins, whose dedication, organisation skills, hard work and determination ensured the project was completed on time and with minimum changes to the original plan. My thanks also to Dr Les Morgan for his contribution to fieldwork in the Northern Territory and Queensland and Ms Mona Taouk for her excellent work on the quantitative aspect of the data analysis. I would also like to acknowledge the support of Dr Michael Leach at the initial phase of the project and Dr Kevin Brown in the quantitative data analysis and in particular the implementation of multiple regression analyses. Our thanks also go to Gill Gartlan for her excellent editorial support.
