CONVERSATIONS IN SPACE

Conversations in Space is a group exhibition that features artists at differing stages of their careers. The exhibition asks us to think about how we create connections between each generation in our society.

Helen Maudsley has been painting for more than 60 years and is one of Australia's most accomplished artists. She creates many visual 'drafts' of her ideas before producing a final painting. Maudsley describes her works as visual essays or poems constructed of lines, numbers, letters, geometry, and symbols from everyday life.

Laura Skerlj uses social media as source material for her paintings which she works and reworks directly on the canvas. Her paintings become more about the application and use of paint and as time goes on the original source of her ideas become less recognisable. Skerlj is interested in the mutability of painting as her original subject is taken apart and comes back together again.

Noriko Nakamura creates carved limestone sculptures that are full of life and movement. Nakamura draws inspiration from Japanese mythology, food and the female body and imbues her sculptures and inanimate objects with the attributes of animals, people and plants. Sometimes her sculptures are like relics or found objects from the past and other times they are ritualistic to be used as part of an unknown ceremony or ritual.

Alex Hobba's animation uses 3D gaming software as a way to explore genre and communication and the representation of information. As the voice of a narrator tells a story over a series of changing images of people, places and situations it is hard to determine what is fact and what is fiction, and why our stories often require a hero.

As you explore the exhibition, think about how the works relate to one another, what they have in common and how they are reflected in the title Conversations in Space.

Glossary

Conversation: a talk, especially an informal one, between two or more people, in which news and ideas are exchanged.

Flat Time: time that passes without any changes – the time between things happening.

Junk Time: a time of constant distractions for instance when we are in a social media loop, our eyes flickering between images, unable to stop and question what we are seeing.

Flaneur: Flaneur is a French word meaning someone who 'saunters' around observing society.

Aggregate: a material or structure formed from a mass of fragments or particles loosely compacted together.

High Key (as in colour): having a predominance of light or bright tones.

Animism: the attribution of a living soul to plants, inanimate objects, and natural phenomena.

Relic: an historic object that has survived from an earlier time, that is now no longer used.

Exploring the Exhibition Take some time to wander through the exhibition and consider the	What experiences might be shared between the artists?
following ideas:
Are there any clues as to why the curator James Lynch has chosen these particular works to be exhibited together?
	Find two works by different artists and describe what you find is similar and different about them.
What do the works have in common?
	Consider the art elements and principles and how they have been used. Are there similar applications in more than one of the works?
Explain how the title Conversation in Space might fit with the works in the exhibition.	Think in particular about: Movement Colour Texture Composition
How do the works relate to one another?	A flaneur is described as 'someone who saunters around observing society'. Each work is a reflection of the world around us in some way. Choose a work and write a short reflection on how you think it mirrors the world around us.
Are there any obvious differences between the work of Helen Maudsley with her 60 + year career and the work of the younger artists?	The curator explains that he feels a great sense of purpose when being able to offer emerging artists opportunities to be able to exhibit their work, alongside more established artists. Why do you think that might be?

Questions

Imagine walking into one of Helen Maudsley's paintings – can you describe what that might be like?

What might that feel like? (Hot, cold, windy, still?)

What is the mood like in that painting? (Happy, sad, confusing?)

What might you hear? (music, items moving, voices?)

Are they soft sounds or loud sounds?

Activities

Helen Maudsley creates detailed and poetic titles for her work. Choose a work and come up with an alternative title that reflects what you see and how you feel about the work.

Experiment with composition – choose a piece of text – a book, an article in the paper, an event that has happened. Brainstorm your ideas about the event and create a list of all the items, objects, phrases that form part of the story. Experiment with collage, pattern, colour, pieces of text or numerals to create a creative interpretation of that event or story. Draw on your experience of 'stepping into the painting' previously to help with your creative decision making.

NB: you can also do this activity with objects assembled and photographed.

WORKS IN FOCUS

Noriko Nakamura is a Japanese-born, Castlemaine-based artist who uses stone carving and organic elements to make installations that draw on ideas of animism and ritualistic practices. Using traditional hand-carving techniques Nakamura transforms limestone from an inanimate and heavy material into playful forms, suggestive of movement and lightness. Nakamura is interested in this transformative process and how the manipulation of materials is used to imbue a material or object with significance, changing its meaning and our relationship to it.

Questions

What organic or living shapes and forms can you identify in Milking my heart?

What ideas do you think the artist is trying to express?

Imagine this sculpture is based on a story or fairytale – what do you think might have happened in the tale?

Activities

Create a sketch of Milking my heart and annotate the drawing with notes about what each part of the sculpture reminds you of. Think about what living things the artist is representing on her work.

On that same sketch, write or draw how you think the form she has represented would move if it were actually alive?

What kind of sound would it make?

In what kind of environment might it exist?

Create your own small sculpture inspired by the work of Noriko Nakamura using found and recycled objects. Start with a central object as the base from which to add organic looking elements. Be creative with found or recycled materials. How can you make them look organic and alive? Try and keep the materials used to one colour or paint your work one colour when it is finished. This will help highlight the forms in the work. Give your work a title.
